Prefatory.

At the western extremity of Texas, on the Rio Grande, 31 degrees north latitude, 106 degrees west longitude, and 3760 feet above the level of the sea lies the city of El Paso.

On the Mexican side of the Rio Grande is situated the town of Paso del Norte, or Juarez, as it is now called, and an easy walk or drive takes the visitor or sojourner into that quaint old adobe town, with its seventeenth century method of living and working. A trip to the Holy land would not more completely put him in a "foreign country."

As regards location, El Paso holds a "key to the situation," possessed by few cities in the United States. Paso del Norte, the "Pass of the North," has been for centuries a point through which the Mexican government held intercourse with its outlying provinces, Santa Fe lying 340 miles northeast. Through this Pass the Rio Grande flows onward to the sea, irrigating a valley as fertile as that watered by the river Nile.

It is proposed to construct a dam across the Rio Grande above El Paso. The project has been approved by United States engineers, and, from the paramount advantages it will afford, should be speedily consummated. This dam has for its object the storage of water during the flood season, thereby insuring an abundant supply the entire year, and the confining of the river to one channel. The result would be to make a garden of the fertile valley of the Rio Grande on the one hand, while the direct benefit to El Paso in furtherance of her manufacturing industries on the other, would be simply incalculable. The ball is in motion, the necessity exists, the feasibility is acknowledged, the fiat has gone forth, that the vast enterprise shall be pushed forward to successful completion, and we congratulate this progressive city in advance on the possibilities that are in store for her through it.

In 1880 El Paso had a population of less than 500 souls; in 1890 she toed the 10,000 mark, and the census of 1896 shows her to have 15,468. From a scattered village of a few years ago, she is to-day a city of beautiful homes and her business portion is compact and substantial and attractive. It is a common remark by visitors that "El Paso has a city look." Many of her stores have stocks tastefully and artistically displayed that would do credit to Chicago, and on all sides are evidences of thrift and go-aheadativeness and push.

El Paso is built almost entirely of brick. It has first-class telephone, water, electric light and sewerage systems. Its streets are well paved and sprinkled, which make it a veritable paradise for the bicyclist, and so popular is the method of locomotion that young and old, big and little, Peg & Co. included, take to the wheel as naturally as does a duck to water. El Paso has a gas company, an electric light company, three banks, two international street railways, which connect the city of Juarez. The Rio Grande is here spanned by three bridges; situated two miles from the city limits is a sixteen-company military post, under command of Col. Clarence M. Bailey.

El Paso has sixteen churches, five public schools, numerous private schools, a kindergarten, a fine opera house and four daily newspapers: The El Paso Times (morning), and the Evening Tribune, Telegram and Herald, all ably edited and prospering. We believe El Paso is the only city in Texas of its size supporting four daily newspapers, and certainly there is no surer index to a city's prosperity than a fearless public press.

El Paso has many other features worthy of mention, which limited space compels us to pass by, but her public buildings and especially her court house must in justice receive a passing notice. Her Federal and school buildings are beautiful and substantial structures, but all must yield the palm to her court house, which is the best preserved and best kept public building in Texas today. Every thing about it is as clean as a new pin, and when the visitor is told that it is not a new building, but that it has been in use ten years, he is credulous. But it is a fact, nevertheless. It would be money in the pocket of every county in the state of Texas if it would appropriate funds to send its commissioners to El Paso to get Judge Hunter's recipe for housekeeping. It certainly would stimulate the sale of paint, soap, scrubbing brushes and window glass throughout Texas. The investment would bring big returns all around, would add greatly to the comfort of court officials and attendants, and the removal of the cobwebs and rubbish from the scales of justice might give them an evenner poise.

In 1881 the first railroad reached El Paso. Now five great trunk lines center here: The southern terminus of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railway, the northern terminus of the Mexican Central railway, the Southern Pacific, the Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio railway run directly into it, affording every facility to the traveler and making tributary to her southern New Mexico and Arizona, and west Texas and Old Mexico.

El Paso's direct east trunk line is the Texas & Pacific railway. This is the popular route to all points in the east, southeast and north and makes quickest time to New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago and intermediate points. Its popularity is enhanced by the fact that its location is a happy medium between the frozen north and the torrid south, and at all times of the year the traveler, be he frail or robust, enjoys the comfort that only the Texas & Pacific can offer. The management of the road is liberal and broad-gauged. Col. Gaston Meslier, the general passenger and ticket agent, whose very name is a synonym of successful railroading, sets the pace, and as the "Cannon Balls" shoot east and west doubtless occasions his competitors many sleepless nights in their futile efforts to keep in the race. But the T. & P. gets the business, because she is built that way. For further particulars call on Darbyshire.

The Southern Pacific "gets up early in the mornin'" and covers all points to and beyond the Golden Gate.

The climatic conditions of El Paso all conspire to make an ideal health resort. Its altitude, as before stated, is 3760 feet above sea level. The temperature is mild, the latitude and altitude combined give a mild winter climate. Cyclones, sunstrokes and blizzards are unknown. The air is exceptionally dry and pure. The nights are always cool, producing to a marked extent the purity of the atmosphere as noted here. In winter the thermometer rarely ever marks below twenty degrees, and only a very few days during the winter does it show below the freezing point. The average of cloudy days, according to signal service reports, is less than three days per month, or less than ten per cent. It is, practically, continuous sunshine. The cures that have been effected are very many and some of them remarkable. Sufferers from pulmonary troubles especially find great relief here, and there are to-day living in El Paso hundreds of people, in good health, who declare that had they not come to this genial climate they would either have died long ago or continued to drag out a miserable existence. The altitude, while high enough to be pure and bracing, is not high enough to embarrass the heart's action.

What St. Paul and Minneapolis are to the northwest and Denver to the west, El Paso is destined to be for the southwest. Its location is at the great "Pass of the North," through which travel from Mexico to New Mexico, Arizona and California has passed for centuries. It is the principal gateway between the sister republics, and is the great natural railway center of the southwest.

Its railway connections makes El Paso the great competitive point of the southwest. In round numbers it is 1200 miles distant from San Francisco, from St. Louis, from New Orleans, and from the City of Mexico, occupying a central position relative to them all, and gives it access to the markets of the northwest, east, south, and of Mexico and the Pacific slope.

El Paso is the chief supply point for a vast extent of country, and must remain so. There can be no competing city to the east nearer than Dallas, more than 600 miles away—to the north than Denver or Pueblo, a distance of more than 700 miles—to the west than Los Angeles, a distance of more than 800 miles. It has no competition south nearer than 600 miles, and commands the trade of the entire northern portion of Mexico.

Within the area directly tributary to El Paso the country is occupied by great cattle ranches, and nearly 2,000,000 cattle are feeding there.

Within the same tributary district the mines of gold, silver, copper, lead, iron and coal yield about $7,000,000 annually to the United States. The product of northern Mexico mines within the tributary district amounts to several millions more. El Paso is the supply point for all these, and besides commands the trade of a rapidly developing agricultural and horticultural interest within the same tributary district.

El Paso is the largest smelting point and mining centre south of Colorado. The El Paso Smelting Works are extensive buyers of ore, bullion and all classes of furnace products, and an army of men are employed by it. Their pay roll is huge in dimension, and this institution alone would be a valuable acquisition to any city.

This necessarily brief and incomplete survey of the field will give any one interested an idea of the possibilities of this thriving city, whose future success only needs the guidance of the energy and business sagacity that in the past has never failed her.

The publishers of this book promised the business men of El Paso a reliable business directory. To that end we bent every energy and spared neither pains nor expense in its accomplishment. We made a thorough and accurate house to house canvass and have the pleasure to announce that we found a population of 15,468 souls.

We present this book as the result of our labors, and ask the people of El Paso to pass judgment on it. If your previous experience in this line was unsatisfactory, we trust we have not given you just cause for disappointment. We have endeavored to keep the book fully up to the highest standard of excellence in every respect. If we have succeeded in pleasing you then we ask you to experiment no further, but request that you will reserve your future orders for us, as it is our intention to supply El Paso with a directory as often as the same is demanded.

We thank our patrons for the liberal support extended us and the citizens of El Paso generally for courtesies extended, and with best wishes for a bright and prosperous future, we remain,

POSTOFFICES IN TEXAS.

[From the U. S. Postal Guide, compiled and published by George F. Lasher, Philadelphia, Pa.]

The postoffices in Texas are divided into four classes, the first three being called presidential postoffices for the reason that when the salary of a postmaster reaches the sum of one thousand dollars, the appointment by law vests in the president. In the fourth class is found nearly all the offices; the salary being less than one thousand dollars, the postmaster is appointed by the postmaster-general. The first-class contains all offices where the salary is at least three thousand dollars; the second class runs from two thousand to three thousand dollars and the third class from one thousand to two thousand dollars. Total population of the United States as per U. S. census of 1890, was 62,903,318; of Texas, 2,235,523.
