El Paso, Texas.

The following word picture of El Paso is from the pen of Mr. J. H. Campbell and we adopt it as our own, prefacing it with the remark, gratifying to use, that El Paso has, as shown by our latest canvass, a population of 35,002, an increase of 250 over 1901.

As a smelting, mining, trading, cattle and railroad center, El Paso is unexcelled in the West, and with the perfection of irrigation methods she is already becoming of importance as the chief city of a surrounding agricultural community.

Cattlemen, miners, prospectors, railroad builders and hundreds of other classes make their headquarters at El Paso, where they buy their supplies and equip themselves for expeditions into the surrounding mountains and plains, and trade is brisk the year around.

The growth of the town having been rapid, the real estate values have frequently doubled within a single year. A splendid waterworks, sewer system and seventeen miles of electric car lines have had much to do with the material advancement and growth of the city, and the health of the inhabitants is unsurpassed—the death rate, aside from invalids, being exceedingly low.

By many El Paso has been classed as a second Denver. "Somewhere on the border of Mexico and the United States," said Baron Von Humboldt, the historian, "a mighty city will spring into existence, to become the metropolis of all that region." According to Jay Gould and Senator McPherson, El Paso is the city referred to.

Foremost in extent, value and general importance among El Paso's resources is the prodigious mineral wealth of the tributary country from 500 to 1,000 miles radius.

The most striking indication is found in the plant of the El Paso Smelting works. This great plant ranks among the largest smelting plants in the world. It employs 1,500 men and has a payroll of $50,000 per month. More important, however, than this local payroll to El Paso is the fact that this company pays the shippers of mineral from the surrounding country $800,000 to $1,000,000 per month.

The territory upon which the El Paso Smelting Works draws for its ores includes New Mexico, Arizona, West Texas and the Mexican states of Chihuahua, Sonora, Sinaloa, Durango, Coahuila and Lower California.

The Federal Copper company has built smelting works two miles east of the city, with a capacity of 200 tons per day, for treating copper ores only.

The railroads find their heaviest and most profitable traffic in the carrying of ores, coal, mining machinery and other supplies directly and indirectly connected with the mineral industry.

The mining towns and camps will always afford a home market for the agricultural products of the surrounding country, and for the products of canneries, evaporators and factories for the manufacture of everything that can be produced here or brought here as raw material for local manufacture. Mountains of iron ore and vast beds of coal are the pledge that extensive iron and steel works are to be established here at no distant day. Gold, silver, lead and copper are at present the chief mineral products.

And yet the development of the mineral resources in the country tributary to El Paso is still in its infancy. More smelting plants, more manufacturing concerns of various kinds, more warehouses, more extensive stocks of goods and more railroads will be needed here as mining developments go on. This it is which, above all else, insures the growth of El Paso and the future greatness of the city.

In 1898 the assessed valuation of the city was $5,235,945; in 1901 it was $11,531,630, or more than double the amount it was in 1898. The reader can safely rely on the fact that fifty per cent is about the average valuation of the property returned, and at the rate of taxation, including state, county and city, for all purposes, is $2.60.

The total county bonded indebtedness is $102,000, and the total city bonded indebtedness is $101,000. The property owned by the city and county very largely exceeds the amount of the indebtedness and the cash on hand could very materially reduce it at any time, and with the large revenues that the city and county receive, they could call in their bonds within one-third of the time they have to run.

In 1903 the capital and surplus of the banks was $735,000 and the deposits $1,000,000, which has more than trebled in five years.

In 1901 the number of teachers in the public schools numbered eighty, the pupils of school age 3,725, and the valuation of school property is $330,000. El Paso is one of the richest places in school property in the Southwest, and pays higher salaries to teachers than any town in the state.

The population of El Paso has more than doubled in the last five years.

Since 1898 the population has more than doubled; the banking business and the accumulation of money, the very best indication, has more than trebled; the building permits have doubled; the postoffice receipts have doubled.

The location of El Paso is most remarkable for geographical advantages for a great city—at the corner and intersection of the great state of Texas, of Mexico, Arizona and New Mexico; it is 600 miles away from any other city of its size and importance, in the center of the richest mining, agricultural and timber country in the Southwest.

Through El Paso we are connected with Vera Cruz, Tampico and Guaymas, and before long one or two more links will be made to connect us with Topolobampo Bay, making El Paso the crossing center of the greatest railway transportation enterprises in the world.

No railway company that ever figures on transportation business of the great Southwest leaves this city out of its consideration, and while it now possesses eight railroad lines, it is but natural to expect that in ten years from now it will have double that number, and perhaps more.

Eastern capitalists have invested two million dollars for the establishment of the El Paso Electric company, a plant as efficient and up-to-date in every respect as any that can be found in any city of its size in the Union.

Capitalists of the States of Pennsylvania and Massachusetts have invested several millions in El Paso in railroad and other enterprises, and not one of these investors can be found who is not satisfied and much pleased with his investment.

Pure water, and in inexhaustible quantities, is found at the very gates of the city. The International Water company, backed and owned by gentlemen of the highest integrity and responsibility now has its plant in course of construction, and we believe they will find it as profitable and satisfactory an investment as the electric company found theirs, if not more so.

Irrigation for the development of agriculture through systems of reservoirs and pumping plants is multiplying rapidly, and before five years have elapsed the valleys of the Rio Grande will be to this section of the country what the valley of the Nile is to Egypt.

Manufacturing enterprises have been established and are growing from day to day, thus assuring this city to become as great in manufacturing as it is in other branches of business.

A great number of details could be given, that would interest anyone seeking for homes, business or investments, but in line with our purpose of condensation, we leave the details to be investigated by the thousands who are constantly figuring on making El Paso their home, and thus verify the strength of our assertions herein made.
