Students Role In Administration Theme Of Eastern Conference

The Student's Role in Administration was the topic of a recent Eastern Conference for Eastern students held at Western on September 11, and many interesting police were interrogated then and later during the conference.

Mr. Scott brought out 10 years of experience in student administration and the additional distinction of having served as union director at four different schools. He was qualified to speak of the various problems and solutions of these problems in student-administration relations.

From the onset of his speech, Mr. Scott emphasized that students should have responsibilities and that they should be prepared for facing them, that there was a difference between the two, and that he could not cross, and that the line was difficult to determine.

He listed as student rights, privileges in the learning areas: student union administration, liability insurance, and student activities fees.

He urged students to develop courses that the presentation they have by using the information they have truly have the students' interest at heart, by using normal or informal supervision, and by making the administration aware of action being taken.

He began by saying that felt students should participate anywhere there is a legitimate interest - legislation meaning any act not delegated by law to specific administration.

Then listed some necessary ingredients of the conclusion that the area is legitimate; cooperation is necessary, with making the area; high quality of administration: standing for unwise decisions - as well as wise ones; bringing awareness of the other group; awareness of the accountability of a group as well as the individual; and a realization that policy making is concerned with a situation of some change.

Students might also have been surprised at the amount of the student-participation in administration. There are still areas where more students can be involved. It is not w ith special emphasis on some issues, but by wise use of current methods, they should be open for more student opinion in administration.

Institutions Of Higher Education Faced With Self-Examination

Colleges and universities of the United States, if one understands proposals concerning institution of a White House Conference on Education and the reorganization and administrative structure of the University of California, soon will come under intense self-examination.

The significant in that higher education has been the establishment of new traditional patterns, even to the degree that high school preparatory work is the ideal job intended for the first two years of college.

The White House Conference, according to James Macnab, with the title "Saturday Review," shows that this national "cultural Establishment" no longer controls learning of the nation's pedagogical pattern.

Now coming the shots is the "New Establishment," made up of men, as Cass says, "uncommitted to philosophies.

What means, at least theoretically, is that Civil Rights are not being pressed in life, job opportunities, and the problems to be faced by men and women of changing society soon will enjoy discussion emphasis.

It means also that the tradition pattern of a lecturer presenting oral materials will be invaded in its own way.

At Texas Western, as at probably most colleges, this challenge will be met, cooperation will be welcomed; for unfort unately, people have not taken much as taught as sacred truth that has no application to life at all.

The questions important to people are: what is the level high level abstractions or observations that the fact in 1838, Friedrich Nietzsche, couching his way through the country, stopped a peasant girl and asked if her duodenum functioned properly.

What students are concerned with are questions such as the moral implications of White/Black relations as seen in the works of William Faulkner or the actual relevance of the "new math," for housewives.

Another present problem is that teachers, when discussing a discussion, a rapport between the oral questions was, rather, a reading from textbooks or lecture notes for 60 minutes, or the students who often do not change course from one year to another.

Professors too often are weatherbeaten, traditionalistic sounds of their own voices or too concerned in personal resistance to get "involved" with the questions of their students. Of course, this is educational dishonesty to the student and the society, the one that gives.

One reason for this common problem is that teachers don't care really what students want to learn. They say and much to ask. Their influence politically may rapidly become potent and rightful so, for in terms are asked to be in college, and they also should have voices in determining national policies; they should, if "College is America's Best Friend," and the express needs for our donations, have the right to criticize poor teaching and instructors' in-difference; they should, if college is important for self-worth and for life, ask how it is prepared for, and they may expect when they forever walk away from the everyday, clearly defined classroom knowledge of the world.

Of course, change and self-analysis in higher education is something that teachers taught us that must be real and, we do not want unless change comes, and it shows that teachers, as a rule, will be no higher education at all, Colleges will be, in the course, with "average" people, "education-obsolete," devoid of meaning.

of the University of Chicago, believes, for the most part, colleges and universities are now and that attending college is not learning, but serving time.

While Hutchins believes this, however, progress is slowly being made. Recently, for example, the University of California announced plans to decentralize administrative authority, eliminating much of the red tape and arbitrary faculty positionings that last year's demonstrators found oppressive.

The step is one away from the paternalistic college and placement tests make easy, and one toward the personal view of education "free speech" leaders really hope to achieve.

At Texas Western, many of the problems of higher education are on display, but opportunities for becoming intellectually involved are as available here as they are at colleges anywhere in the country.

What may be accomplished calls us individually as the challenge for excellence; the presently lethargic, often comically inadequate students and teachers that we have become, by acceptance of that challenge, a community worthy to be termed "intellectual."

Freshmen Make 'M' Day A Success

Sunburn Brightens Workers

BY HELEN MUELLER

(Editors note: Helen Mueller is a freshman at TWC. These are her impressions of 'M' Day.)

“M” Day 1965 dawned bright and early (a little too bright for some and a little too early for others). All the chosen and privileged freshmen were bussed into Magoffin Auditorium where a series of opening speeches were given and a physical fitness exhibition presented by the cheerleaders.

REFRESHING HIKE

After this attempt to get the freshmen into the swing of things, Project "M" began with a refreshing 55 mile hike to the base of the mountain where the "M" was to be made its final home. The fresh were a little winded but still determined to do a good job. One of the major jobs of the day came however, when one of the fearless leaders divided the mass into two groups—boys and girls. There were yells of "discrimination," and "not fair," but divide them they did.

REAL WORK

The boys trotted off to pick up a few rocks (to give the appearance of working) while the girls settled down to do the real work. The real work consisted of filling cans with rocks, sawdust and kerosene. The SA President had remarked that the "chosen hill" would be a little bit steep and please for any freshman not to fall off. The "chosen hill" looked before them with a 106 degree slope and plenty of loose rocks. This was going to be a job the freshmen would not forget for quite a while.

COMMENTS FLY

Assembly lines twisted up the mountain and the work began. After an hour of pure, undiluted work, the comments were flying fast and thick. "Oh, this is pure grist!" "I think the boys have the easiest job." "Hey, no smoking around the kerosene cans!"

"I think the girls have the easiest job." They had said that two "M"s were to be constructed—the girls were to do the letter for the game that night and the boys were to do the ground work for the permanent letter.

EASIEST WORK

After two hours of work, the girls were almost through, but the boys could see no change in the face of the hill. The men were heartened, however, when one of the engineers smiled and said, "This is the easiest work we could find for you—and you are going to kill yourselves!"

Three hours, 200 cans, and a few squashed feet later the leaders called a halt to the construction of the "M." Thinking at last they were through, the fresh wearily slid off the face of "Everest." Standing at the bottom, looking up the "M" looked pretty good, if one overlooked the fact that there was only one leg to the "M." The leaders bravely volunteered to finish the "M" after they had eaten.

GIRLS VOLUNTEER

Thirty girls "volunteered" to quit work a little early and go help set up the Bean Feed. The exhausted freshmen dragged their weary bodies over to Kidd Field and proceeded to struggle through the gates. However, the freshmen were soon up and standing in line for the food. The lines moved slowly and one starved boy remarked, "Hey, I think we are in the line to buy tickets!") Everyone eventually was served. The meal revived the freshmen enough for them to play football!

"M" Day was an experience the freshmen won't forget for a long time; what is the cost of tired bones, smelling of kerosene, squashed toes and sunstroke when TWC can boast a new letter—the new "M"!

WHERE IS MOHAMMED?... Although they may not be able to move mountains, these Student Activity volunteers demonstrated their ability to build them when it was discovered that the selected site for the Miners' "M" lacked rocks. The solution was a relay team to move rocks UP the mountain.

"OVER THE TOP"... Fred Craft seems to be saying as he directs a Miners' assault on the new "M" mountain. Students pictured are assisting the Student Activities president as he directs the emplacement of sawdust filled coffee cans which will be used to light a temporary "M" for the Sun Bowl until permanent lighting can be installed.

"Hey, no smoking around the kerosene cans!"

"This is the easiest work we could find for you—and you are going to kill yourselves!"

"I think we are in the line to buy tickets!"

Israeli Girls Wish To See Army Post

By JOHN McKEOUGH
What do two single, good-looking, girls of Israeli want to see during their first vacation outside their country on a short visit to the United States? An American University, a subway system!, the Statue of Liberty! No. The answer provided by Afra Lipshitz 29, and Shamira Liphaz 18, was an army post. At least that was the opinion of these two girls when questioned on a visit to Texas Western this week, Afra, an ex-soldier, and Shamira, a future soldier, were quite surprised at the sight posted in El Paso pointing out the location of Fort Bliss. They explained that in Israel, the location of each military station is kept such a secret that the country has adopted the use of numbers to signify the name of each installation. Only in guarded conversation can a member of their country refer to the proximity of an army post.

Speaking to the two residents of Tel-Aviv, I asked them their opinion of the school system that they had seen in this country. Most surprising was the immediate response that our American school system was much easier than theirs. With only two universes in their country located in Jerusalem and Tel-Aviv, competition and the pressure to succeed is fierce. High-school students are routinely subject to examinations which require 10 to 12 hours preparation the night before. If high school graduates, they have been offered 44 credits toward college work. If they wished to enter an American University in Los Angeles. The abundance of foods and especially meat, were noted by the girls, but aside from their military interests it seems that teen-age girls differ very little in their country. I asked them what dangers if any, they would advise their girl friends to be aware of if they were contemplating a trip to the United States? A big grin preceded the answer, boys. Boys in the United States, one had decided, were much more mannered and polished in those in Israel. The other found the boys colder than in Israel.

I concluded after talking to these girls that the hard-earned reputation of America's manhood would be in no way be diminished upon their return to Tel-Aviv. After all, what is more flattering than the reputation of being well-mannered and dangerous?

Stewart To Receive First SAB Salute

The SAB has begun a series which honors individuals or groups on the TWC Campus who have contributed to furthering the purpose of the SAB. The first of these salutes goes to Joe Stewart, director of the YMCA Student Activities Board. Mr. Stewart came to TWC as a graduate of New Mexico State University in 1962. He began in the Health and Physical Education Department. While in this department he was director of intramural activities, a job he is still doing along with his SAB assignment.

The SAB is a relatively new organization at TWC. It was formulated by the Student Senate in 1963. Mr. Stewart took his present post in 1963 and, through his efforts, interest and hard work, it has prospered.

Mike Anderson, who works very closely with Mr. Stewart, says, "Joe is an all-around friend of the students and faculty."

Mr. Stewart and the SAB have many activities planned for the fall semester. They may be getting a bit of the personal appearance of the two top ranking groups in the country, the Lettermen and the Ser- endipity Singers.

Mr. Stewart makes his home in El Paso at 317 Purple Hills with his wife Judy and their two children, Joe and Stacey.

INTRAMURAL PROGRAM

Anyone, regardless of affiliation with TWC, may participate in the intramural program should they be interested. The Student Activities Board will step by the SAB Office for schedules and information.
