

I am.
I am in the end—one individual.
Within myself I find the strength to carry my burdens and the patience to accept that which I will never understand hoping that wisdom will be gained somewhere along the way.
To live as a man
strong and proud—
free and unafraid—
I realize that my failures can only teach me, my accomplishments can only add to my total self.
And only I can decide what that will be.

Come with me and climb the heights to see the stars above and waves hitting below.
On silver wings shining with youth I will guide you with my hopes challenge you with my fears, if only you promise to hold my hand.
Together we can search our thoughts as every aspect of life continues rapidly.

Forgotten are the things that can and will never be.
Time passes by me
and changes me
with maturity and values different from those in the past.
A world awaits for that which I can give promising nothing in return.
To seek my own happiness and to succeed at that which will make me content with myself is all that I ask.

The night will come and pass as morning light brings a new day.
Fresh with new hopes to add to old ones
I will continue my endless search to see and feel every expression of life.
To experience the tiny joys of touching soft roses in the spring and learn from the sorrows of that which I cannot understand—the lonely moments and tears mixed with happiness and faith—have made me human and vulnerable to my constant dream that someday the screen will be removed from the window, the smell of rain will awaken me and I will reach outside knowing—now I may live.

Changing from Texas Western College to the University of Texas at El Paso has left the campus and students with growing pains and a new sense of pride. The Flowsheet has grown with you and the University, finer in quality and more modern in style. We have attempted to present a unique book worthy of representing a University. We have emphasized the individual and his thoughts, aspirations, and concerns in the opening and closing section of the book. It is for you, the individual, that the Flowsheet was designed. For you to remember, enjoy, and recapture the meaning of your years at the University of Texas at El Paso.
