The background is a light beige or cream color with a subtle, fine-grained texture. Overlaid on this are several thick, olive green lines that form a series of interconnected, rounded geometric shapes. These shapes resemble stylized, elongated hexagons or a network of paths. One large, central shape is particularly prominent, with the word 'CLASSES' centered within it. Other lines extend from the top and bottom edges of the frame, suggesting a larger, continuous pattern.

The line at the Bean Feed increases as the food dwindles.

Nearing the end of his stay at the University, the Junior has time for a leisurely stroll and thoughts of the future.

JUNIORS MIX STUDY AND LEISURE TIME

The members of the class of '69 have reached the point one step away from the long-sought status of Seniors, and the end of an old way of life and the beginning of a new.

They have passed from youth to maturity in their struggle to that end, and they have become a little wiser and a little more confident in their outlook on life and the roles they will play in it. From the core of university life, the experiences that are theirs will effect their future as they have effected their present.

The Juniors have proved that they can live up to their two-fold purpose: to promote class unity for a successful student body and to develop a strong individual.

Anxious students begin the long process of registration.

SOPHOMORES BECOME INVOLVED ON CAMPUS

In just two years, the Sophomores have deeply involved themselves in the University to become true members of the college community. They have shown the sportsmanship, leadership, and unity necessary to take their places in the varied areas of student life.

The class of '70 represents the "midway markers" of the institution with two years of learning behind them and two years of living before. They are no longer considered children, but not yet considered adults. The world to them is still a place of the new and different as well as the old and familiar; They belong to a growing time.

Because they involved themselves so early in their college careers, UT El Paso can look forward to an alert student group in the years to come as they begin to consider the things they have learned—the new ideas and philosophies—and begin to form thoughts of their own. These thoughts, polished by experience and guided by wise minds, will shape their future and that of the University as well.

Lounges in the Union are popular for conversation, or study.

FRESHMAN ROSTER REACHES NEW HIGH

The largest Freshman class in the history of the school entered UT El Paso in the fall as the first step in the long, hard struggle for knowledge.

Orientation was held for them at the beginning of the year to acquaint them with the purpose of the University. But the real orientation of growth and thought is something subjective and cannot be communicated. Therefore, the class of '71 will be taught and tested with the aim that they will build from their learning and experiences the shapes of their own spirits.

Because snow is so unfamiliar in this area, students find it hard to believe its beauty.
